

Center Theatre Group 2010 Fellows

Where are they now?

Brian Patrick Byrne continues to teach Technical Theatre classes at Milken and serves as the Technical Director and Lighting Designer for all productions at the school. This year, they are mounting a High School production of "Man of La Mancha" (November 20th - 22nd) and a Middle School production of "Fiddler on the Room Jr." (January 29th - February 1st), among other fun shows and performances throughout the year. (Updated 8/2011)

Joanne Karr continues to direct the Theatre Program at Walnut High School, sometimes collaborating with 2011 Fellow Helen Papadopoulos from Suzanne Middle School in the same district. This past summer, she directed a one-act play at Chino Community Theatre and took it to AACTFest (American Association of Community Theatres Festival) in Rochester, NY. She also attended a workshop in Washington, DC on the Civil War, which included material on historical re-enactments. (Updated 8/2011)

Jane Mceneaney continues her position as the Performing Arts Coordinator at Turning Point School in Culver City. She dreams of one day creating an Ubuntu Center where high school and college students can create theatre as an agent for social change. In the meantime, she is leading workshops with a small group of teens to continue the work she started in New Orleans. Follow her blog at <http://janemcneaney-ubuntuworkshop.blogspot.com/> or on twitter: @Ubuntu_Theatre. (Updated 8/2011)

Brandon Rainey is the Artistic Director for ICEF Public Schools and begin work as the Drama Teacher/ Director of St Bernards Catholic High School. (Updated 8/2011)

Patricia Sciortino is the new Head of Education at The Quad Manhattan, an after-school program for 2e learners in New York, where she has been teaching improv, sketch comedy and stand-up comedy. She is working on developing classes that focus on strengthening students' social/emotional and executive functioning skills, while being lots of fun. Follow her blog at www.thequadmanhattan.com. (Updated 8/2011)

EDUCATION+
ENGAGEMENT

Center
Theatre
Group

L.A.'s Theatre Company
A non-profit arts organization